11.—It remains to be decided whether owner should pay for the cost of the trap with its appurtenances or whether it should b provided and fixed at the public expense. If this were done it would be a relief to the individual, but would not add seriously to the cost of the sewerage system. After all, every house-drain must be either connected or reconnected to the new sewers, so that the incidence of the cost would not be unfair. On the whole it appears to be expedient that both new connections with traps and appurtenances as well as re-connections should be made at the public expense. It should however be clearly establishof that the trap, when finished, becomes the property of the householder, and that he is re sponsible for its maintenance.

12.-I further recommend that the Sanitary Board should undertake the construction of house-drains at the request of the owners, and at their expense. The work should be carried out under the supervision of the Sanitary Surveyor who is also in charge of the main drain age. If this were done, the renewal of housedrains might, in many instances, be effected concurrently with the construction of sewers. and under common supervision. The work therefore would be well done with promptitude and sconomy. It would be practicable to take in hand a district and finish both house-drains and street-sewers at once, and then relieve the public of the annoyance of repeated opening of the streets. 13.—It will be practicable to arrange a fixed scale of charges for house-drain construction, so . that the owner could be given a very close estimate of the cost of the work before it is comsupervision and of the preparation of record

14.—It is also worthy of consideration whother owners should not be allowed to pay for the cost of house-drains by annual instalments extending over, say, seven years. Assuming the rate of interest to be 4 per cent then seven annual payments at the rate of 164 percent, on the cost would be required to pay it off with interest. 15 .- A Committee of the Sanitary Board is now engaged in the consideration of the drainage by-laws. I have the bonour to recommend that this report be submitted to the said Committee for their consideration, so that they may, if they see fit, introduce any modification into the bylaws that may appear desirable for the purpose of carrying into effect any suggestion that I
